Discretionary Trusts

Introduction

This information sheet sets out briefly for general guidance the main features of Discretionary Trusts and their tax implications.

What is a Discretionary Trust?

Discretionary Trusts are so called because no beneficiary has a fixed entitlement and the trustees have complete discretion to decide what, if any, benefits should be given to each of the beneficiaries. The trustees are given powers of appointment which enable them to pay capital and income to one or more beneficiaries or to create new trusts for the beneficiaries.

The person creating the trust is known as the Settlor and the class of possible beneficiaries can be as wide or as narrow as the Settlor chooses. Mere inclusion in the class does not confer any legal right to receive any benefit. The Settlor may retain or give the trustees power subsequently to nominate or to exclude beneficiaries. Not all of the beneficiaries need to be in existence when the trust is made.

The trustees will normally be given power not only to distribute income but instead to accumulate it as an addition to the capital of the trust.

A Discretionary Trust may continue for up to 125 years from its creation. This was limited to 80 years for trusts created before 6 April 2010. The trust deed sets out the Settlor's wishes on how any assets which are not distributed by the trustees must devolve when the trust comes to an end.

Use of Discretionary Trusts

The main use of Discretionary Trusts is where flexibility is required. This may be, for example, in a case where someone wishes to make a gift either during lifetime or on death but has not yet decided who should eventually take the assets or in what proportions. Flexibility is maintained by listing all the possible beneficiaries and allowing the trustees to decide who receives what, if anything, when the time is right.

There are also certain tax reasons why a Discretionary Trust may be recommended (see below).

The Trustees

In view of the very wide powers which a Discretionary Trust normally confers on the trustees, it is vital to ensure that they can be relied upon to safeguard the trust assets and always to act in the best interests of the beneficiaries. It is desirable for the Settlor to write a letter of wishes providing the trustees with non-binding guidance as to how the Settlor would want them to act. It may also be desirable to appoint one or more professional or other independent trustees, particularly if the intended trustees are also possible beneficiaries.

Tax implications

1 Inheritance Tax (IHT)

The creation of a Discretionary Trust is a lifetime chargeable transfer. If the reduction in the Settlor's estate following the gift to the trust exceeds the current IHT threshold of £325,000 (after deducting exemptions and reliefs), IHT is charged on the excess at 20%. If the Settlor dies within seven years, additional IHT may be payable. Any chargeable transfers by the Settlor in the seven years before the trust is set up will reduce the available IHT threshold.

The value of the property when settled will continue to form part of the Settlor's cumulative total of chargeable lifetime gifts for seven years. The Settlor's cumulative total will affect the rate of IHT paid on subsequent gifts or on death within the seven year period. Normally, the transfer of assets to a Discretionary Trust should be made before other lifetime gifts to individuals.

The trustees will be liable to IHT on the value of the trust fund every 10 years. There is also an exit charge when distributions of capital are made. If the value of the initial settled assets is below the IHT threshold and exemptions, there can be no liability to IHT during the first 10 years unless the assets which are settled qualify for either business or agricultural property relief. On each 10-year anniversary of the creation of the trust, and when capital distributions are made, the maximum rate of IHT on each occasion is currently 6%. In the case of a trust made on or after 18 March 1986, if the Settlor is not specifically excluded as a possible beneficiary, the trust assets will be treated as remaining subject to a reserved benefit with the result that their value will remain part of the Settlor's own estate for IHT purposes.

While a trust is discretionary, the trust assets are not comprised in any of the beneficiaries' estates for IHT purposes, and so the death of any beneficiary will not lead to an IHT charge on the trust.

Many other types of trust have, since the March 2006 changes, been treated for IHT as if they are discretionary.

2 Capital Gains Tax (CGT)

The trustees will be liable to CGT currently at 20% (or at 28% on residential property) in respect of any gains exceeding the trustees' available annual exemption, presently being a maximum of one half of the individual's annual exemption.

It should be possible to avoid any liability to CGT either on the creation or on the termination of a Discretionary Trust. The liability may be deferred irrespective of the nature of the assets by an election for hold-over relief (except as mentioned below).

Where the Settlor has retained an interest in the trust as a possible beneficiary, it is not possible to hold over gains on transfers in to the trust.

A Settlor is regarded as having an interest if there are any circumstances whatsoever under which the assets within the trust or the income arising to the trustees may become payable to the Settlor or to their spouse*. The Settlor will also be regarded as having an interest if their minor, unmarried children or stepchildren can benefit.

3 Income Tax

Trustees of Discretionary Trusts pay income tax as follows:

- the first £1,000 of income is taxed at 20% (unless the trust only receives dividend income, in which case the rate of tax is 8.75% on the first £1,000);
- tax is payable at a special rate of 39.35% on dividend income. However, the trustees may have additional income tax to pay if they distribute dividend income; each case must be looked at separately. A beneficiary (other than a top rate taxpayer) receiving dividend income will be able to recover some or all of the tax paid by the trustees;

- tax is payable on all other income at 45%. However, a beneficiary who receives a distribution of income is given a credit for the 45% tax paid by the trustees. If the beneficiary is a non-taxpayer or a taxpayer at the basic or higher rate, they may reclaim the surplus tax previously paid. If the beneficiary is taxable at the top 45% rate, they will have no further tax to pay;
- If the Settlor or their spouse is a possible beneficiary, all the trust income will normally be taxed on the Settlor during their lifetime. Even if the Settlor and their spouse are excluded from any possible benefit, the trust income will still be taxed on the Settlor if the Settlor's minor, unmarried children or stepchildren receive distributions of income (or of capital to the extent, if any, that income has been accumulated).

Administration

A Discretionary Trust needs to be properly administered. This usually involves the trustees registering the Discretionary Trust with HMRC's online Trust Registration Service, filing annual Tax Returns and issuing appropriate tax deduction certificates to beneficiaries who have received income. The trustees should also maintain trust accounts and properly manage the trust's property or investments.

The amount of administrative work will depend on the nature of the trust assets and on the frequency or otherwise of distributions of income and capital.

Conclusion

A Discretionary Trust may be suitable for an individual who wishes to transfer assets for the future benefit of a number of potential beneficiaries and who also wishes to retain maximum flexibility as to the manner in which the income and capital is distributed.

A Discretionary Trust can be particularly attractive if the initial value falls below the Settlor's IHT threshold. As noted above, the income tax suffered by the trustees may be partly or wholly recovered to the extent that income is distributed to beneficiaries who pay tax at a rate lower than the trust rate.
